Video Review

Being one of the smallest ethnic communities in the United States, Cuban Americans attract the dramatic attention of the US politicians. Exploring this phenomenon, the video Inside the USA covers the relevant topic of secrets of the significant political influence of Cuban Americans and their relationships with the communist native land. The video has several main points. First, the story of the conflict comes, giving a brief analysis of the causes that made Cubans left their native land and immigrate to the United States at the second part of the twentieth century. Second, the video narrates about the life of Cuban Americans as habitants of Miami's Little Havana. Third, the video discusses the secrets of the dramatic attention of the U.S. political leaders to the Cuban ethnic community. Cuban American's political preferences are under analysis as well. Fourth, the video suggests a discussion of the attitude of the older and younger Cuban American generations towards the Cuba's history and the embargo. The necessity of this punishment is under consideration. Finally, the future perspectives of the U.S. policy towards Cuban Americans are discussed.

The video Inside the USA relates to the week's instructional material, suggesting detailed practical information that illustrates the topic we passed. The conflict roots back to the Caribbean Crisis that took place in 1962. After the revolution in Cuba, Fidel Castro came to power, establishing the communist regime on the island. This event caused the huge wave of Cubans' migration to the United States. They stayed in Miami, creating Miami's Little Havana.

Located in South Florida, Cuban Americans are a legendary ethnic community that has a decisive impact on the US presidential politics. Despite significant political influence, Cuban Americans cannot replace the economic embargo against Cuba that is the challenge at the present time. While the older Cuban Americans hate Fidel Castro, his brother, and the communist regime, the younger generation wants to establish friendly relationships with Cuba. The political opinion has changed. During several decades, this ethnicity supported the Republican Party. Nowadays, the younger generation votes for the Democratic Party, striving for friendly relationships with the native land of their parents.

To sum up, Cuban Americans have experienced tragic moments in their history. However, time is passing. Modern politicians are to take into account this fact, developing new politics towards Cuban Americans.
